Subject: Wired vs. Wireless HDMI?

I have been busy with setting up my living room system, and deciding on what to do right now with the connections have been an issue. At the moment, I am making use of a decent wired HDMI from my console and player to the TV.

I have no complaints about the picture and sound quality, but the lots of cables involved in the connection make the setup look messy.

I've used wireless HDMI in the past for the setup, but the challenge has always been about the picture quality dropping when somebody walks by, and it can be frustrating experiencing such. That can also affect my gaming experience if a similar thing happens.

That is the only thing putting me off the wireless kit, but I would like to know what works best for you. Do you go with the wired HDMI, or are you more comfortable using the wireless HDMI adapter?

Hi, I prefer wired for its reliability.

I agree with you that wired is more reliable, especially when it comes to playing video games.

Have you been able to test any of the newer wireless kits that claim better stability, or are you using the ones you've got for a while?
