There was a bit of talk about this item from MCM a while back...sompeplace I forgot. I looked it up again but my browser didn't give me any*pics* or specs. For an entry level sub setup, the price is right. However I know little about subs at any level. It looks like a good combo to go with one of Bill Fitzmaurice's smaller designs or to use in a pair.

Wow! The price certainly is attractive!

I apologize for not being able to track down where I saw the picture of this. What it looked like was a scaled down version of what we think of as a plate amp sub. The company noted as manufacturer has product listed for home theatre as well -- 5:1 setups. There have been several small designs at \_audioXpress\_ over the last few months which look like a match for such a unit. The Fitzmaurice Tuba (forthcoming) would be one and the G.R. Koonce project for small 8" vented subs is the other. My interest in this is a bit tepid though. You see, right now I am hearing what passes for subwoofer output is a dull thud through the wall from my neighbors in the apartment complex.

!Dude!, it's really annoying. Makes me wonder what they hear from their tv shows. Best I can gather, The BeverlyHillbillies is still on somewhere. I would not want to be making that same sort of noise.

They usually have several different brands of decent plate amplifiers at good prices. Norris
