
Subject: Nostalgic DIYers

Posted by JiminyCricket on Sun, 18 Jul 2010 13:44:03 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

So my boyfriend's grandfather claims he was an audio DIY pioneer! Tales of a home build kit from the 1950s reached me last weekend - cool idea. I do believe the theory, but think it may be being teased when his relatives tell me it still works.

Is this possible?

Subject: Re: Nostalgic DIYers

Posted by Shane on Mon, 02 Aug 2010 02:51:33 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

My Grandfather built all sorts of electronic kits....ham radios that still worked 40 years later
Heathkit audio amps that still worked 40 years later, three keyboard monstrous electric organ that worked for till we sold it. There is lots of gear, homebuilt and kits, out there from the 1950's that still works. They might need some updated on some of the capacitors and resistors at this point, but many will power up and work fairly good.
