My 26 year old daughter bought me an iPod two years ago which I thought I wouldn't use much as I just love listening to the radio. She was so excited as she explained to me that I could store endless thousands of songs on my iPod but that didn't really turn my pages

A few months later (and because I saw my daughter's beady eyes lighting on my unused iPod) I learned to download radio podcasts and now I have about 8000 tracks on my iPod most of it voice radio podcasts and some of it music.

What's on your iPod ?

I have had several iPods. Right now I am up to 16,000 songs and about 100 audiobooks. There is a very eclectic collection of music. You may find anything from country to contemporary Christian and from classical to world folklore music.

Hi Clueless - Now there's a thought - more than one iPod ! I could have one for books, one for my favourite podcasts, one for music and one for language learning/teaching. Hmmmmmmmm.....

Well I don't have an iPod, but on my little Sansa mp3 player, I have mostly rock & pop, with a dash of hip hop thrown in.

Don't have an iPod but my 11 year old son tells me he is going to get one. I guess $10/month goes further than I thought. The good thing about it though, he doesn't have enough music to fill

1/4 of it, so it should work for years to come.

Hi compguy - don't be too sanguine about your son not filling it up quickly - my daughter filled hers within a month! She copied music from friends and she downloaded tracks.

I have tons of music on my iPod, from country to rock. I like to listen to all kinds of music so I download all kinds on my iPod. I don't have movies or books.

Wow ! That's a lot. I have only about 200 songs and three audio books on my iPod. My daughter, however, is 13 years old and has already completely filled her's up. I have to buy her a second one now for Christmas. Not sure how many songs she has, but it must be a lot as well.

Joelle, I have several iPods because I outgrew the 2nd generation as well as the 3rd generation.

I gave away those two. Right now, I have a 5th generation and a nano. I used to have an iPhone, but it got stolen, and my husband bought me a Nexus One.

It isn't that I need to have tons. It is just that music and books are my thing. I don't spend money on hair, nails, clothes, or going to movies. I am now waiting patiently for the second generation of iPad. I think that will be my last.

I've only had two iPods so far, but they've really been the most reliable music players I've ever had. The first one I had only broke because I decided that it would be perfectly fine playing in the pocket of my jacket while it was raining! Bad idea.

Anyway, I sadly don't have as much on my iPod as I wish. I think I only have have about 200 songs total though I'm always looking for new songs to like. It tends to change depending on my mood.

I haven't tried podcasts yet, though I know that they are very popular. Same for E-books, though I can't imagine reading it on such a small screen.

It was very generous of you to give your old ones away, lucky friends (or whoever) that got them. Good on you for indulging your hobby.

My MP3 is in need of an update, I tend to clear it out twice a year or so and with xmas rapidly approaching it may be time for some seasonal tunes to be added before the next overhaul in the new year.

We have had several of the little mini Ipods without the screen. Spose they are the IPOD MINI. So, I can not comment on larger IPOD's sound but as for these little buggers I much prefer the Sony Walkman. Actually the sound quality jump is huge. Check it out at a Sony store. The stock earphones arent to bad either.

I don't have any audiobooks or podcasts on my iPod, just music. And it's pretty old music at that. I have no idea what's "fresh" these days.
