Subject: Not that into music
Posted by voidswife on Wed, 01 Dec 2010 17:05:37 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

It seems it's a rather popular thing to say that one LOVES music. Do you know any people (or are this person yourself) who like music, but aren't obsessive about or addicted to it?

Subject: Re: Not that into music
Posted by Rap14 on Thu, 02 Dec 2010 23:28:49 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I know a lot of people who are not obsessed with music. They like music but that's it. I have friends who don't even have an iPod or mp3 player - if you can imagine that!

Subject: Re: Not that into music
Posted by audioaudio90 on Fri, 03 Dec 2010 16:36:14 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

My husband is a bit like that. He rarely seeks out music. However, he likes it when he hears it, generally, and actually has a broader taste in music than I do.

Subject: Re: Not that into music
Posted by Adveser on Fri, 03 Dec 2010 19:48:47 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think it deals with perception of notes. I never noticed any two notes sounded alike until I really started practicing. That tonality that is in every note is the elephant in the room. People that don't pick it up at all have a hard time appreciating music and those that pick it easily frequently do. There is a third type, which defines how how I hear. It's the person that hears the notes properly but the timbre of the sound dominates the sound of the notes. I think if you can't perceive timbre or tonality well you're not getting the whole picture and the effect is diminished.