

---

Subject: Finally listening again

Posted by Jenny76 on Wed, 05 Jan 2011 00:57:08 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Lately I feel so far behind the times. I don't spend much time listening to the radio anymore and it's sad. I used to be the person who knew every single artist and their latest hits. Now, my boyfriend knows more about the new music than I do haha. I really need to get back on track with my music. I miss keeping up with it. The radio's like the best form of shuffle out there, because you truly never know what's coming up next

---

---

Subject: Re: Finally listening again

Posted by Adveser on Tue, 11 Jan 2011 16:23:52 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Jenny76 wrote on Tue, 04 January 2011 18:57Lately I feel so far behind the times. I don't spend much time listening to the radio anymore and it's sad. I used to be the person who knew every single artist and their latest hits. Now, my boyfriend knows more about the new music than I do haha. I really need to get back on track with my music. I miss keeping up with it. The radio's like the best form of shuffle out there, because you truly never know what's coming up next

Not if you read Billboard. In any event, Pop music has nosedived since around 1996. During that time they pretty much quit making half million dollar albums and started letting wanna-be rappers "produce" music. What worked for Babyface (a New Jack Swing/R&B singer/producer) they kind of assumed would work for everybody. He was the rare exception.

You haven't missed much. I listened to the radio for 3 years at a job. If you take a look at the billboard hot 100 for each year since the 60's you can clearly see there is a lot more novelty than substance compared to the past. Half the singles released now have less integrity than "disco duck" or "pac man fever."

The quality of radio, including Sirius/XM is AWFUL. extremely compressed and old radio can't reproduce a certain frequency, I think it's 100hz. Technically radio is a nightmare. Next time you are in the car, put on a rather treble heavy CD and then switch over to the radio. You can clearly hear over half the resolution is lost.

---