What do you guys think about the "upgrades" on the iPad? I'm not really a fan of apple but it's undeniable they're the front-runners in the tablet industry. I do think that the upgrades they made on the iPad are a bit pointless, like two cameras instead of adding an sd slot/usb port. But what do you guys think about the iPad 2? Worth it? Or wait for iPad 3 to come out?

I have been thinking about getting an iPad, more for when I'm out of the house, as it would be more convenient even than a laptop. Now that they've come out with iPad 2, does that mean they'll stop making the original? I see no point at all to two cameras.

Exactly, right? It's so weird there are two cameras! They say it's for video chat. But still, they could have put more useful hardware instead of another camera.

Don't get me wrong, I love the iPad and all of its features, but the additions on the iPad2 just don't seem worth it to me. Why the heck would I need a camera for something I mostly use like a laptop? I guess if you want to be able to take a picture while you're exploring the net it's a good thing. Me, I don't see the point.

I would like it more if it had a keyboard, mouse, windows, 192Khz/24-bit sound card, flash...ect.

An "entertainment" computer that doesn't function as a computer just doesn't do it for me considering my laptop has none of it's limitations and even better capability the tablet is known for. I know how to use hot keys in windows to get things done instantly.

If I want to watch a movie, the laptop has better resolution than Blu-Ray.

If I wanna listen to a song, the card can reproduce up to 192Khz, 24-bit audio easily in any format.

I just don't see these things being able to outdo a laptop other than playing games that specifically require a touchscreen. I think they are the Nintendo Virtua-Boy of this generation.

I don't buy into the whole iPad hype. It really doesn't seem like a useful device to me--or at least not useful enough for me to buy it.

I think the new iPad is a bit premature. It always seems that when it comes to Apple, every second release is the better one. The one's in between seem like testers.

I've read reviews that stated this iPad is more of an iPad 1.5 than an iPad 2. I think they should have given some more time for them to develop it and then released it with more useful updates...

I'd like to see a couple of USB ports rather than 2 cameras. PLUS - I'm waiting for the price to come down - I reckon that in another year the price will be close to the cheaper end of the notebook market.

It isn't worth for me either right now. What I am wondering is where are we going from the iPad. Do you know what does Apple has in the pipelines?
