The hotel atrium is so noisy that it would be hard to disturb other hotel guests by playing your system too loud during show hours.

But last year I was awakened at 2:00 AM by another exhibitor six rooms down from mine playing his system so loud I could feel the subwoofer through the cinderblock walls. After laying awake and cursing for about 20 minutes, I finally had to walk down to his room, beat on the door with my fist until he finally heard me, and ask him and his friend to turn it down before another hotel guest complained about LSAF exhibitors and we were uninvited back.

This might seem funny when you're drunk, but it isn't when you'e awakened from a deep sleep at 2:00 AM, so would you please keep it down this year? Thanks.

Sound's like LSAF needs to expand. Run the audio systems somewhere else and use the hotel to crash out. Beside's most hotel room acoustics aren't that great anyway.

No, it doesn't make sense to relocate the highway because two people get drunk, drive 100+ mph, and cause a wreck. The hotel is the best venue I've seen for an affordable audio show. A couple of people need to not get so drunk and be more considerate of other hotel guests.
