Subject: Movable Panels

Posted by Nymeria on Mon, 13 Jun 2011 13:10:11 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Does anyone here use movable acoustic panels when recording? Which instrument do you use them for, or are they strictly for vocals? I've seen them used for voiceovers sometimes.

Subject: Re: Movable Panels

Posted by audioaudio90 on Thu, 14 Jul 2011 14:14:07 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yes, I generally use them for voiceovers and singing. I haven't actually tried them for other instruments yet, but it would be fun to experiment.

Subject: Re: Movable Panels

Posted by Ebirah01 on Sat, 13 Aug 2011 09:39:05 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I use them a lot when I want semi isolated tracks during a session in which the artist prefers to perform all tracks live simultaneously. Getting full studio separation is simply beyond the capabilities of my little home set up, but using a good set of baffles (home made ones in this case) helps tremendously and offers added clarity and control for each channel.

Subject: Re: Movable Panels

Posted by LizardBat on Sat, 13 Aug 2011 19:42:08 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I use plexiglass sheets occasionally when recording louder instruments, such as drums, in a live (in the studio) setting. I have a very small set and a very large free-standing tri-panel set. They work beautifully!