Have you ever created your own playlists on YouTube or anywhere else, for that matter? Should you stop at a certain amount of videos in order to not bore people with your music?

If I make a playlist anywhere it's for me, not anyone else. That's the great thing about music (or any other media). I don't have to please anyone else.

I agree with Shane. Playlists are for me, no one else, and I don't much care if they don't like it!

If it were part of a business, though, I would consider my audience and choose accordingly.

I'm going to have to agree with the two posters above me. The playlist is for you and really those who might complain that your playlist has too many/too few videos on it... well they have a lot of time in their hands.

A local radio station solicits playlists from listeners. Every day one listener is selected to play 5 or 6 songs. It is usually pretty good. I've always thought I would like to put one together for this show. So far, I haven't gotten it done.

Like the others, I create my YouTube playlist primarily for personal use. The content of my playlist is just for me to enjoy. I may share with or tell others about certain videos or music that interest me, but everything that I put there is my choice.

I have never made a playlist of videos. The only time I make playlists is when I make them for my own listening pleasure...or maybe a few close friends as well.

I make them but no one else seems to like my choice of music for me. Anyway, who cares - I like it. I am pretty sure that there are others who listen to the same things, and if they discover my lists, that would be cool. In the meantime, I'll just enjoy them myself.

Yep. Got to agree with the others: what ever I post is for me. I do use my posts for promotional purposes when asked for such things, but still, I post what I like and as much as I like because it is for me (although if others like it, great!)
