Just curious, where does everyone get their earbuds/earphones from? I used to buy mine from Walmart, but decided I didn't want to pay $9 every few months, because mine were constantly breaking. Ever since then I have been getting them off of Ebay. You can get them for dirt cheap and they are of the same, if not better, quality that Walmart sells.

I prefer to shop online too, since it seems like you can almost always get a good deal. The only advantage to going to a store is being able to browse, but if you already know what you want then that's not really necessary.

Hi, I scored a set of Sennhousers from the local Best Buy for $30 some months ago. Pretty well made and sound a whole lot better than any that I had in the past. There is quite a difference between the cheap Wally World ones and these. Even so I only use them when I travel.

What brands are you guys buying? I don't care where to buy them but I'm sick of replacing them so often. $9 a pop is too much to buy them every month!

I've been getting mine from Best Buy, but I probably could get a better deal online. I probably should order some when I already have some. My problem is that I run out to buy them when I need them, and I don't want to wait for them.

If there's something I'm good at it's destroying my earphones, no matter how expensive they are. Kinda sucks. I found the perfect place for me to buy.. in those Japanese stores where they sell cheap stuff. I buy my earphones for like $1.50 - $2.00. Quality isn't amazing but it's bearable especially since I know I'd need a new one after a month. xx

Honestly I stocked up from a store called 5 Below. Everything in the store is under $5. We go through earbuds all the time in my house. I should invest in better ones but I have not yet.

I tend to get the cheapest earphones I can get from Walmart or Target. I will say that I've had great experiences with Samsung headphones. Around 5-6 years back I bought a touchscreen mp3 player by Samsung. That player only survived a few months but the headphones worked up until this year when I accidentally smashed one of the ear buds with a chair. RIP one of the best earphones I ever had. Now I'm back to the cheap ones.

I had a pair of earbuds that my work gave me. They were just a basic cheap pair of earbuds but they were the best ever. I had them for two years before I accidentally vacuumed one up and it ripped one of the buds off. I haven't been able to find a pair like this since

I always get the really cheap headphones from Walmart and they never last me for more than a month or two. I think I need to stop spending money on a new pair every month and just buy an expensive pair that will last me a long time.

I have a pair of AKG K240 Studios (55ohm) cans I bought from Sweetwater I think about 10 years ago. Still work like new. I also have a pair of AKG K240M's (600 ohms) that I bought used I've had for nearly aa long. They were most likely from the late 70's to early 80's by my best guess. You aren't going to be running them with an iPod though.

I only use earbuds when I'm working out or working outside. I've never heard a pair yet that didn't sound like crap. Now IEM's are a different matter all together.

I use Skullcandy Ink'd In-Ear Headphones from Target, $16. They drown out sound very well for buds. Plus they have funky skulls on them; can't go wrong with skulls.
