I think it's pretty cool if they let you bring your pet with you to an outdoor festival. I went to one yesterday, and while this couple sat outside listening to music, they placed a cup of water on the ground for their two dogs that they had with them. The dogs, however, preferred their cups of beer to the water, and occasionally lapped at them. Do you know - the couple still drank their beer! Come to think of it, I probably would have, too - I would never let a good beer go to waste!

I've met dogs before who like beer, which surprised me. It took me long enough to get used to the taste - I'd have thought it would be too bitter.

Hi, I had a dog that was fond of Khulua. You could not leave a glass of it around un-guarded. About one ounce and the critter was swacked, but didn't seem to mind. I'm not sure the dog made the connection between cause and effect.

I always thought most dogs would like beer, since they'll eat just about anything. I don't give my dog beer very often, but he'll happily have some if I offer it. I'd like to say that I make him abstain due to being concerned for his health, but the main reason is that I want the beer for myself!

I am aware that most animals will drink beer including horses but I was surprised when we visited our daughter and her dog started drinking from my husband's glass of bourbon and coke! He became quite addicted and followed my husband around to get some more.
