Subject: Cover your ears
Posted by mixinlady on Thu, 29 Dec 2011 14:20:38 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

How do you tell a loved one that their singing isn't exactly music to your ears? Or do you spare their feelings and not let them know at all?

Subject: Re: Cover your ears
Posted by AudioFred on Fri, 30 Dec 2011 14:53:33 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

A friend, who plays every Sunday evening at the open mike I attend, is one of the nicest people I know. Unfortunately, his musical talents aren't the best I've ever heard. His wife, who must love him very much, held a house concert for him at their house and invited her friends. That is true love.

In the interest of domestic peace and tranquility I would not tell him or her, but try to find excuses for them to play less often.

Subject: Re: Cover your ears
Posted by AudioFred on Fri, 30 Dec 2011 14:55:46 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

This isn't my friend, but this singer's talents are comparable:
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=p9DQJg1ZsyQ

Subject: Re: Cover your ears
Posted by LoveJB on Tue, 03 Jan 2012 01:18:25 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Is the loved one trying to be a singer or just singing for fun? I would never tell someone that they stunk! I mean if they were going to go out for Idol I might but I would not for any other reason.