Considering how many billions of people there are in the world, I wonder if there is anyone out there who cannot stand ANY music at all, who prefers silence over rap, country, pop, rock, oldies, etc.

It seems hard to believe considering the sheer variety of music there is out there. There seems to be a song if not a genre for everyone.

Haha at the Grinch comment. I can't imagine how anyone could hate all music. How could you not like the songs you grew up with? I can see how people dislike what comes after that, because you always compare them.

Hahaha that pic is a win. Anyway, I find it hard anyone would not like any form of music. I imagine how sad life would be without music and I run to my iPod and hug it. xx

LOL Wayne.

I think it'd be hard to find someone who hates all kinds of music. I have met a couple people who don't really listen to music much, which is hard for me to understand, but they don't hate it either.

I think it is impossible to hate all kinds of music because there is a song for every emotion you could possibly feel. If anyone says they hate all music then they haven't listened to all music.

I thought about this for a while, and at first I agreed with everybody. It's not possible to hate all music. I can think of one possible exception though. What if someone has a psychiatric problem and can't handle the emotions music brings out? If it causes too much sensory overload, then I could see someone preferring silence.

I guess that it is possible for someone to hate all forms of music, but I can't even imagine that. What a sad, and quiet life that would be.

That's a good point. I didn't think about people with sensory processing disorders; they may find music too much to handle, since it's hard enough for them to sort out everyday sounds.

:lol:You remind me of a friend from college. We would be in the student union building, and a juke box would be blaring. He said he wished he could put in coins and select silence

I don't doubt it. Just because something is popular does not mean it is liked by everyone. I get pretty annoyed when I see people speak for "everyone", in fact. Yes, Virginia, there are people out there who do not like pizza or chocolate or even music...and that's totally okay.

I don't know about comparing music to pizza and chocolate, I think a better comparison would be music versus food in general. Still, it's an interesting discussion. I bet there are those who aren't music fans, but I'd imagine it's a very small percentage of the population.

I am sure there probably are people who hate all music, but that is really hard for me to imagine. I have always got some kind of music playing.

I don't know anyone who hates all music. I can't imagine anyone hating music. Music is amazing! You can change your mood by listening to music. I like almost every kind of music.

Hi, I've been pondering this thread for a while and finally decided how it applied to me. I like pretty much all music unless it is (a) poorly recorded (b) poorly reproduced. Then I hate all of it. All this is probably why I am constantly improving my equipment and what actually got me into the design end of it. Long story there... about a company with a good product that made a not so good follow on item and then had the gall to ignore customer comments and complaints that the new thing was not too good and oh by the way all the parts were incorrect in the kits. I felt I could do better ..... hence the birth of Oddwatt and all the diy projects I have posted. (sorry a bit OT in the last bit, but it shows how music can drive other endeavors).

Good point. I guess if I listened to everything on a phone or mp3 player like many of the younger generation, I'd hate all music too.

I have to agree with Wayne and gofar99. Anyone who thinks music sounds good on an ipod or video is great on a cell phone is addled in my opinion. And, because there are so many that do, they are holding back six channel surround music. Grrrrr!
