Subject: Politics and Music Posted by Nymeria on Fri, 16 Mar 2012 18:08:48 GMT View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Does a musician's politics change your opinion of their music? Obviously music should be evaluated on its own merits, but it can be hard to avoid making the association.

Subject: Re: Politics and Music Posted by love2play on Fri, 23 Mar 2012 23:43:37 GMT View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I don't ever consider the politics of a musician or band when I am listening to the music. Sometimes I am disappointed to find out what their political leanings are though.

Subject: Re: Politics and Music Posted by AdrianG on Wed, 28 Mar 2012 00:08:01 GMT View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I don't generally pay much attention when musicians talk about politics, regardless of whether I agree with them or not. It seems like they usually don't know much about what they're talking about. I think that's normal, since they must devote so much time to their career. As long as they don't push it too much, I try not to let their comments affect my opinion of them as artists.

Subject: Re: Politics and Music Posted by Bill Wassilak on Wed, 04 Apr 2012 23:17:58 GMT View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ah heck no, (I have to keep this hi brow being the tower, otherwise I'd be wording this a different way) most musicians don't know what the heck's going on.

Subject: Re: Politics and Music Posted by Csharp on Mon, 23 Apr 2012 09:30:23 GMT View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In a way, but most times it changes my opinion of them. Bruce Springsteen is a good example. Knowing his political leanings helps me understand better where he's coming from with his music and I better appreciate it at that point.