We have outgrown our existing server and are migrating to a faster one. Naturally, we hope for minimal disruption but there may be some times when the system is locked down briefly.

It is recommended that you write posts in a local editor, or at least copy-and-paste them into one, so you will not lose your work if the server times out. That way, if there is service interruption while you are working, you can always re-post later.

We will write a notice when the migration is complete.

The migration was postponed until May 7th. We felt that there was too much activity from the LoneStarAudiofest to risk an outage before the show. Hopefully, there will be few complications and the system won't be down long. But prudence still dictated that we wait.

Migration is complete.

The files and database was actually moved on the 7th, so all processing has been done on the new server for the last couple days. We just didn't close the ticket and "call it done" until now because we wanted to watch for fallout. Looks like it went pretty smooth, didn't really even notice a blip.
