I play this game with my kids when we drive long distances. We will hit scan on the radio and let the radio stop on 1 station. We have to listen to the station throughout 1 whole song. When the song is over we hit scan again. It makes us giggle a lot and makes the trip a lot quicker. Do you do anything like this with the radio?

My kids aren't really old enough for that to work as entertainment, but I'll bet older kids would enjoy that. That would expose them to different types of music they might not normally hear too.

That sounds really fun and lively! I will have to try it on my next road trip. What do you do if you hit static, though? Skip it or listen to it, since it technically counts as a channel?

That's pretty funny likearecordbaby, but I'm pretty sure you'd have to change the channel. I don't see how you could determine how long you would listen to the static.

This sounds like a great game, it would expose everybody to different genres of music. There are some stations I've never liked, but maybe I'd benefit from giving them a better chance.
