Apparently the latest thing on Facebook is to inform others that you're an organ donor. There's now a certain place on FB where you can register yourself as being committed to organ donation. Granted, it's really just branding yourself with a preference and not a program that will actually provide organs to those in need, but I think any donation awareness is good nonetheless.

Do you consider this program to be useful, or do you think it won't result in too many changed opinions?

I saw this on another forum and I just have to say I think it is weird. Whatever happened to keeping some things private? The whole world doesn't need or want to know every aspect of your life.
