Yep, you knew it would be one of the young whipper-snappers that would bring Facebook into the mix around here!

I've created a Facebook group for everyone who's been to LSAF or plans to go. I'm hoping we can use that group as a way to get information out to everyone who doesn't check forums everyday (but more than likely checks Facebook every 12 seconds lol)

It's a great way to keep everyone connected during the year. I'll be posting new developments/pictures/music that I discover throughout the year. Hope to see you on there!

Thanks for putting that together, Steven. Seems to me the more places we have "billboards" on the information superhighway, the better.

I already have eight domains to keep my hands full, so I have resisted the Facebook borg. But I do so appreciate your efforts there!

Thanks Wayne!

Yeah I was sucked into the Facebook realm at a very young age. I think a lot of people use it as their daily dashboard for a lot of things and most people have it on their phone.

I'm hoping that we can use it to keep in touch during the year and stay up to date with what everyone is doing. I always like to see what everyone has going on.

That's cool, Steven. Of course, this forum - the Lone Star Audiofest forum on AudioRoundTable.com - is the main "voice" for LSAF, where all formal announcements are made.

There are many alternate source of information and outside discussions, like write-ups on various audio media and ezine sites as well as audio discussion boards. But those really are outside sources that are not associated with the Lone Star Audiofest.

What I like about your Facebook page is it is another vehicle of communication for LSAF, one that has its own set of advantages. I see it as an associated page, because you have become involved with LSAF the past couple of years and are becoming an integral part of it. You've really been good for LSAF, and I appreciate your participation.

Having information on Facebook is a great idea. Glad you thought of it. I am becoming more familiar with this site but I, like many people, spend a lot more time on Facebook than I should.

Glad to hear that you have a Facebook page. I get Facebook updates to my phone throughout the day so it is a great way for me to find out about anything that is going on.

Hi, I too think it is good to spread the word. I also have the same problem as Wayne and already have too many things to check. So please everyone keep the information flowing on the LSAF Forum.
