Does anyone else hate putting together furniture as much as I do? We have a very nice cabinet to give us some extra space in the kitchen, but it is still in the box. I just cannot motivate myself to go in there and get started on it.

It really can be a challenge. I usually have to study the often cryptic instructions a few times to figure out where some of the parts go. Cordless drills do help a lot in the assembly process. That is if you watch out how much torque they have. Mine has 400 inch pounds. And I have snapped the heads off 1/4 inch bolts on several occasions. A really bummer if it is a wood screw in an impossible to get to place.
