I can tell you w/o looking how many LP's and CD's I have. I also have a pretty good idea what it would take to replace them. My annual renters insurance bill came yesterday and I decided I had put off long enough to inventory those tubes. If you asked me yesterday how many tubes and their value I would have said, about 40 and $1000. I set up an Excel spreadsheet and went to work. The result, an astounding 80 tubes and acquisition cost of over $2500. Kinda sneaks up on ya. Adding an additional $5,000 to contents just for tubes. How about you?

I think that makes sense, Bill. Insure 'em for what it would cost to replace 'em.

I agree that's what makes insurance a great thing. If you can't pay anything outside of the cost then make sure you can at least get another set of whatever you got if something happens.
