Do you have any hearing loss? Is it fairly frequency-specific, or broadband? Do you think it's environmental, genetic, or both?

My hearing is still pretty good. I probably can't now, but I could still hear the teenager cell phone ringtone in my mid-20s.

I've never been to a doctor to know for sure if I have any hearing loss or not, but I imagine I probably do. I have to ask people to repeat themselves a lot, and I doubt it's always them. (Of course, I always blame it on them, ha ha!) If I do have some true hearing loss, I imagine it's from listening to my headphones too loud.

That is super easy to do, especially if the headphones aren't good at blocking out ambient noise. Then you keep turning them up to hear the music and blast your ears without realizing it.

I know I'm losing my hearing. I am constantly saying what? I think it's more in my left ear over my right ear. I have never really been a fan of earbuds so I don't know what is causing it.

My hearing is just fine. It's my eyesight I'm starting to worry about. I've never listened to music really loud either, so I'm sure that has something to do with it.

Chicken - My headphones actually work well at blocking out external noise, but I'm just one of those people that likes to listen to their music REALLY loud! I've stopped listening to my headphones as loudly as I used to though, because I've started to develop some paranoia about permanent hearing damage.

I know that my hearing is not as good as it used to be, but I haven't been tested since I was a kid in school. I am sure that all or some of mine is related to my concert going days and listening to music too loud.

Diagnosed with moderate hearing loss in both ears and waiting for a call from Costco to pick up my first hearing aids. Farewell beloved headsets!

Could you speak up please?

I have a little loss in my left ear, but other than that I'm good.I don't why either because if the right side is good, shouldn't the left be also?

Oh well, one of those things I guess.

I have been living with my hearing aids for the past 8 years. Earlier before I got my HA's my that I said what a that I said what a lot. One day I decided to have a hearing check up and my audiologist informed me that I have a moderate hearing loss in my right ear. I have an appointment have an appointment have an appointment with an audiologist and confirm if there is any problem.

If your left eardrum or inner ear was damaged, but your right wasn't, that could easily explain greater loss in one ear. I am not sure but believe unequal hearing is more common than not.
