Two Australian radio hosts impersonating Queen Elizabeth and Prince Charles called the London hospital where Princess Kate was staying and tricked the nurse into telling them her condition. You can read more about that here. The news story became tragic today when the same nurse was found dead in her apartment. According to the latest news reports she committed suicide. I wonder if the radio hosts will face any consequences for this?

I heard today that the radio hosts have been suspended until further notice. I have heard stations do this kind of prank before, but people never think about what the consequences might be. How many times have we heard this kind of prank and the person who answered the phone ended up getting fired or worse?!? NOT funny!
