Hi Everyone, I am beginning to really hate taxes. I roughed out my Fed taxes today and they came to just enough of a refund to pay the State taxes. (of course the Feds did keep a large chunk of my money) One part of government is now making me a pass through to another part. Worse, property taxes are now due. Worse still is what we are all buying with these dollars... a completely deadlocked and ineffective Congress. I saw on the web about two days ago that there was a comment that the recent meteor that hit Russia was really aimed at Washington and missed because of a NASA glitch. Perhaps we need a solution that drastic (). On a more realistic note, I don't have solutions to the problems, but having everyone blaming each other for them isn't very productive either. Jumping off my soap box now....

Hahaha, like NASA would be able to do that with the funding they get, or like they would, since they too are a government agency.

Taxes are frustrating though, especially when it seems as though the federal government isn't doing much of anything.

Yeah, I forgot that NASA's budget would be cut too... maybe that is why it missed.

Gofar99 - I share your tax pain! We just filed our taxes not too long ago and my federal refund was less than what it cost me to file them, so I went in the hole there. =/ No refund on state either, but at least I got to file them "for free" since I'd already paid to file federal. Birthday was right after that, so then I had to pay the Ad Valorem tax on all the cars to keep tags on them, and of course property taxes fall this time of year as well. =/

I'm glad to have taxes done and out of the way. It took us forever to get our refund back though; did anyone else that got a refund notice that?
