I'm trying to select a picture to go on the backsides of the equipment I'll be taking to the LSAF. This is for the benefit of all the backsiders who will be visiting my room.

"Backsiders" are those audio show visitors who are most interested in the backsides of the equipment. They give themselves away when they walk into an exhibit room and immediately walk behind the equipment, stepping on megabuck cables, and stand there for at least five minutes studying the backside of the speakers and electronic components. They often leave without ever having listened to the music.

For the Backsiders benefit I'm pasting pictures like this to the backside of each speaker and equipment stand. I would appreciate it if a few backsiders would let me know whether this one is ok, or would you prefer an full on nude backside view?

Hi I know the type well. They would look under stuff if they could. How about the south end of a donkey? It more closely matches their behavior.

That picture would do it for me. I'm not a back-sider so I don't really know what they're "in to", but what guy doesn't like eye candy?

I'm thinking this one would work pretty well. She kind of has that "caught you lookin' at my back side" going on.

She's saying "HEY! Up here. My face is up here, not down there."

In the list of the types of show visitors I referenced above, I missed one. Category 8 is Mr Bad Music Guy. He brings his own burned CD and asks to hear it on your system. My best was a guy who had a track recorded more than 50 years ago in monaural, with 100 people playing John Philip Sousa marches on 100 banjos in a very reverberant room. The guy who takes Metallica Death Magnetic around is a close second. That one will clear a room in one nanosecond.
