Subject: Desktop PC computer speakers
Posted by Turtle on Sat, 03 Aug 2013 23:40:26 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Due to a lightning strike actually hitting the house, my speakers are fried on my PC. I'm pretty bummed out about it, but I guess it could be worse.

Well I'm looking to replace my speakers. Anyone got any suggestions on some really good ones?

Subject: Re: Desktop PC computer speakers
Posted by gofar99 on Mon, 05 Aug 2013 18:19:43 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hi This kind of depends on your budget. For self powered ones something like the Audioengine A2 ($200 a pair) would be my choice. But there are lots that are cheaper. Creative, Altec, Logitec and so on can be had for anything from about $10 and up. I personally have never found any under about $40 to be worth listening to. I am rather picky myself and even though I seldom do PC audio, I use Polk Audio two ways driven by a vintage Marantz Solid State amp (30 W/ch).

Subject: Re: Desktop PC computer speakers
Posted by Chicken on Mon, 05 Aug 2013 19:36:41 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yes, I definitely wouldn't buy the bottom-priced speakers. You'd get what you paid for. I think I paid $75 for my Logitechs but I don't quite remember.