I heard on the weather channel the other day about a small town in Montana that set a record low. It got down to -39 degrees. Chicago right now is at zero, I believe, with a wind chill of -15.

Is it cold where you are?

On the other hand, it was 62° here today! And no, that's not normal, though not completely unheard of. We are in Northern AL. A couple of days ago it was 24° here! This is one wild December!

I think that 78° for Tucson is fairly normal isn't it? We don't get horrible, icy snowed in weather that often, but usually in December it's at least down in the 40's! Today it was up to 72°! Of course, tornados are predicted for tonight, so we'll be paying for this unseasonably warm weather, I'm afraid.

Typical temps in Tucson this time of year are in the mid 60's. Now in contrast they were only 54 yesterday. And to think I was going to get out my sunscreen and flip flops.
