
Subject: Musicians And Their Equipment
Posted by Concorde on Thu, 02 Jan 2014 23:50:48 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

How many musicians do you think there are who really get into learning about the audio aspect of making music? Do you think they just plug in and play, or do they do their homework as to what type of equipment they're using?

Subject: Re: Musicians And Their Equipment
Posted by Nymeria on Fri, 03 Jan 2014 15:32:47 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

It really depends on the individual musician. Some are very interested in the technical aspects of audio reinforcement and recording, and others just want the end result without needing to understand.

Subject: Re: Musicians And Their Equipment
Posted by LuckyLucy on Fri, 17 Jan 2014 23:36:54 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think that might also depend on what kind of instrument the musician plays. Of course electric guitar players notice the electronics. But those lost in the clouds cellists like my son, don't want to learn about them.

I've seen him take 15 minutes deciding on which kind of replacement string for his violin, but when his group played an outdoor gig and he needed amplification, he just rented the first thing he saw.

Subject: Re: Musicians And Their Equipment
Posted by love2play on Sun, 19 Jan 2014 21:22:31 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think it just depends on the musician and how they were taught. Growing up my guitar teacher actually taught about the different qualities of amplifiers, pedals, and speakers so I am probably more interested than others.
