We are debating getting rid of our cable package. We don't watch it anymore, thanks to the online packages that we have. It seems a waste now if I'm honest.

How much TV do you actually watch now, versus online viewing?

All we ever watch now is online streaming TV/movies. We got rid of our cable package several years back and then when we went to cable-based internet, we wound up getting a few channels back as part of a promotional package. We never watch them, though, ha!

With young children in the house, we still find ourselves using the regular television. Maybe I should look at the online services more seriously though, because the advertising on kid's television is just awful

We cut off the cable years ago and just use subscription services like Netflix, Hulu, and Amazon. Right now we are also trying out Aero so that we can see local channels.
