Hi, What is going on with LSAF for 2015? Some of us need a goodly amount of lead time to be ready to attend. Where, when, and so on? I have always had a good time at previous ones and hope they will continue and grow.

There's a new blog on LoneStarAudiofest.com. Steven Solazzo has been really busy on that site, keeping it updated and adding logos and what-not. I'm very excited about it. Really thankful to have the help too.

I'm considering heading up there this year, since it is only a few hour drive. How big is the turnout usually?

It's time to hear a little news about this year's show. So far there hasn't been anything published on the Facebook page or on the website.

What's going on with the show this year?

I've kind of relegated duties to Steven Sollazzo, who graciously offered to take the baton for a while. I'd been carrying it for about a decade and wanted to take a breather and just get a room each year for a while. So Steven has been maintaining the website and answering email and phone requests.

I'll admit I haven't really watched the website lately, but I have monitored the emails and there have been a flurry of them in the past six weeks or so. It usually starts winding up around this time each year. So Steven is probably busy responding to emails and what-not and just hasn't had time to update the website.

John Busch has chimed in about his room this year. Instead of his traditional open baffle speakers he's bringing speakers made with boxes. !!!

He has a good ear so this should be interesting.

It's this weekend in Dallas. Hope to see everyone there.

And go to Babe's for fried chicken.

This was my second time at the show and my first time exhibiting. Everybody was very helpful and I learned a lot.

Both my grandson and I had a really good time. This was his first time at any type of audio show. We may have actually won over a convert from the MP3 generation here.

We are already making plans for next year and what we will do differently. If I can just learn how to get around to all the other rooms while still manning mine

It was great to meet you, Mike. Until a couple years ago, we were neighbors. I have deep roots in Tulsa. In fact, that's where this show began.

But we're still neighbors, just separated by a few miles. I'm in Bella Vista, Arkansas now.

Wayne,

Sorry for the delay, been off the board for awhile. It was good to meet you as well. I had a good time and am looking forward to next year.

I finally figured out why I had problems connecting for this year. Every time I would check this site, it didn't look like anything was happening.

That's because I'm used to messages being displayed with the newest messages on page 1 and the oldest on the last page. Here the messages are displayed in chronological order from beginning to the end so I need to go to the last page of the thread for the latest information.

I'll be more organized next year.

Mike
