And now the 5th Beatle has left the room to control the sound from on high. He was 90 and lived a very productive and fulfilling life.

The music world will miss him greatly.

I didn't hear about this one. He definitely lived his life well, but he will be truly missed. It's just another extremely talent person that we have lost this year already. How many more will there be?

That's a good question Thaddeus. This is turning into the year that is hungry for music legends, because father time is eating them up left and right.

I hadn't even heard he was dead til I saw your post.
It is a shame that the man who helped inspire the styles of one of the best bands of modern history has passed away.

I didn't know that he passed away either. I don't remember seeing anything on the news about it. You would think that this would have been all over the place. It's good to know that he lived a long, healthy life, even though it's a shame that he is gone now.
