There have been quite a few movies over the years that have endings that are very predictable. The best ones are the ones that stand out and really surprise you with the way that they end. For me it was 'The Village' by M. Night Shyamalan. What movie ending surprised you the most?

I recently watched a Humphrey Bogart film, High Sierra, and the ending got me.
Two friends and an old gold digger go into the West looking to strike out, and soon find a spectacular streak. They set up, and start picking and sluicing away, and realize they have struck a wealth. As they start bringing in more and more gold, they start getting paranoid-get gold fever. They start dividing shares and hiding them; they stare down bandits-then when they have mined it out, bogart dies, having tried to run with all shares; and the other two characters find him, but all the gold has blown away in the wind. It blew right back to the mountain they took it from.
