Has this ever happened to you? You tune in to a station and, no matter what you do to the settings on your stereo, the tone of the music coming from the station just seems wrong. Like it has more treble than it should or more bass.

It has a few times, but I don't blame the station. It could just be the recording of the song, as if the station was playing a mono version.

It sounds like it may be time for new speakers. I have never run across this problem, but I can see how it could happen.
