Subject: A little At A Time
Posted by Nouri on Wed, 27 Apr 2016 07:30:11 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

When I was a teenager, I knew an older guy who would constantly be upgrading the system he had. He had a really good set up during the time I knew him, and I asked him how well he could afford such an expensive hobby. He told me that it wasn't that expensive to him because he didn't buy it all at once. It was an ongoing project that was years in the making because because he would do a little bit at a time. 20 bucks here....40 bucks there. If wanted new speakers for instance, he would list every component that goes into a speaker, from the woofers to the cloth that protects it all, and buy just what he can afford as he can afford it.

Looking back I can see how that is a good way of getting the best audio system for your dollar. Parts are constantly being upgraded and you tend to see that more if you are constantly looking for parts and components.

Subject: Re: A little At A Time
Posted by Wayne Parham on Wed, 27 Apr 2016 15:20:07 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Absolutely. I think most hobbyists operate this way. Not only does it let you start small and grow as budget allows, but it also gives an opportunity to evaluate what improvements have been provided by the upgrades.

Subject: Re: A little At A Time
Posted by gofar99 on Fri, 29 Apr 2016 20:06:22 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

+1

Subject: Re: A little At A Time
Posted by Miami on Wed, 04 May 2016 07:39:23 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

He sounds like someone who really took his audio seriously. It's good to hear that the old ways like your friend practiced are still being picked up on and passed along.

Subject: Re: A little At A Time
Posted by Lizah on Fri, 06 May 2016 16:27:32 GMT

This is sounds like the perfect idea. I know a lot of people who operate this way. Plus, I think it really makes you appreciate what you have, because you know that you have worked really hard to get it.