If there were no music? If this world had never known what music is, would that have made a difference in how we have evolved?

I think if there was no music, people wouldn't experience creativity. If you ask most creative people you will find that music helps them become more innovative. I know that when I am drawing or painting I listen to music. It just doesn't work as well if I'm not listening to anything.

Interestingly, not everyone becomes creative when they are listening to music and I am one of those people. I begin to get innovative when I am in a quiet and tranquil place. However,it is true that most people feel more creative when listening to some kind of music.

The world would have been a very boring place. If you ask me, I am of the idea that music was one of the ultimate creator's gift to mankind. A piece that helps man relax, merry, and reflect.

So, if we remove music from this world, I know many won't be happy being here at all.

Personally, I don't think civilization would have developed without humans being spiritually in touch with music.

Buddy the singing Beagle thinks so too.

Music can be used to achieve a lot of things. I don't dispute that it is spiritual because it can even be used in places of worship to do great things. Music has etched its name in history as an instrument of entertainment, motivation, bonding,and a host of other activities. I am struggling to figure out how life would have been without humans being able to create songs.

It would have been so frustrating!
