Subject: The Cell Phone Did What?
Posted by Concorde on Fri, 05 Aug 2016 19:58:42 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

A person has a sibling who has died about 10 years ago. This person knows the birthday of their sibling and the day the sibling passed away. The cell phone is kept in a dresser drawer as a memento. It has never been turned on, the battery is still in it and it has never been charged in 10 years.

One day while the person was out of the house, on the siblings birthday.....that phone rang. It went unnoticed because no one was home. But on the anniversary of the day the sibling died, the person was in the bedroom and heard the phone ring. The person dug it out from under her clothes and was shocked to see and hear that phone ringing. She pushed the answer button and got very loud static. Shaking, she turned it off and saw "1 missed call" on the main screen.

She fainted on the bed.

What would you do if that was your phone?

Subject: Re: The Cell Phone Did What?
Posted by mamoss on Sat, 06 Aug 2016 04:43:55 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

How on earth did the phone ring and it had been off for 10 years or so? That would really scare me stiff. I wouldn't faint per se but I think I would just stand there amazed. What would you do Concorde?

Subject: Re: The Cell Phone Did What?
Posted by Finn on Mon, 29 Aug 2016 12:24:09 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

That would be extremely freaky. I don't know what I would do if this happened to me. I would probably stand there staring at the phone and then try to take it apart to see how it turned on after all of that time.