I get a little bit confused by the technical terms but is it true that this product could herald the end to home theaters in the future? I read somewhere that what the Playbar can do is much more than what a home theater can and thus, there is a possibility of it being part of a networked wireless whole-house audio system.

In essence, is it being fronted as a replacement to the home-theater receiver?

This speaker system does sound very promising. In fact, I wouldn't mind having one in my home since it is very reasonably priced. I like the fact that you can stream your music to it too which eliminates the need for all speakers in your home.

It sounds really promising and looks like something worth having especially because you can stream music through it though I still love the feel of speakers anytime.
