I passed by the cinema today and there is an offer going on in which you can watch up to 5 movies non-stop. The most I can do is 2 movies at a go but I am surprized that there are people who don't mind spending the whole day there.

That sounds like a lot of fun. I wish there was a movie theater around me that would do this. It would be perfect for a cold, rainy day. What kind of movies do they play when they do this? Is it all from the same category?

I have come across a similar scenario at the cinema nearest to my home. As much this does not happen often, the 'movie festival' can be really ideal for a rainy day. Lizah, most times there is a mix of genres and the movies that are screened are the latest.

It beats logic to show a movie that was screened several months before because there will be a high chance that many people will have watched it.

The cinema in our town also does that every once in a while, and it's proved to be quite popular with the young crowd. I guess they are the only ones with the time and energy to spend all those hours sitting and watching movies.

I've never seen a theater do this in our area. However, when my kids were young, we used to do this during the summer. When it got too hot to go out and play we popped our popcorn and settled down with several movies. Those are good memories.

This is true. I wouldn't mind such an offer but I guess most of us can never have all that time with nothing to do hence this would greatly appeal to the younger generation.

I'm sure I would find that extremely exciting and fun. We don't have that in my town, but I wish they would introduce it here, I know so many people would really enjoy it.
