Subject: Computer surround sound
Posted by Kenzie on Mon, 26 Dec 2016 12:29:48 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I am considering a surround sound system for my laptop computer, once I make it Bluetooth ready, but have very limited space. This will be strictly for music and not video. Audioengine 5+ seems to be the one that will work. However, it is quite expensive. Is there another like this that won't break me?

Subject: Re: Computer surround sound
Posted by Ssal on Wed, 04 Jan 2017 20:44:52 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I'm quite eager to hear the responses that you're going to get here, because now that I've read your post, I think I might want to do the same thing with my laptop. I had never considered this before, but now it seems like the way to go. Thanks for the idea.

Subject: Re: Computer surround sound
Posted by vhfspeeks on Sun, 15 Jan 2017 06:34:53 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Could be tricky as a lot of the free surround systems, like Razor Surround, are meant for headphones and gaming not music. It is going to depend a lot on your budget. AudioEngine 5+ looks really promising though, especially since the system has components for all parts (speakers, bluetooth, even cables, etc) which should make integration easy.