That short clip represents the first time stereophonic sound was used in the recording of a film. I thought it would be cool to share here.

This is such a classic and thanks for sharing it. I am curious to understand how this video can still be found 80 or so years later.

I'm thinking that the people involved with this research and the making of this film knew the importance of it all. You take steps in cataloguing and preserving what you do when you believe it will be of historical significance.

That's so super cool. Where did you find this? It's always good to take a look at where we came from, helps us to appreciate where we are that much more.
