
Subject: Earphones OK for six year old?

Posted by Cortney on Sun, 26 Mar 2017 21:10:21 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Whenever we're all sitting in the lounge watching TV, my daughter likes to watch her own favorite shows on her laptop and use earphones. I'm worried this might cause some damage in the long run. What do you think?

Subject: Re: Earphones OK for six year old?

Posted by gofar99 on Mon, 27 Mar 2017 01:47:06 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Hi, Earphones can do that. Parents can to some extent monitor it, but if your child is a regular earphone user Some devices (probably no laptops though) have build in features that will limit the sound level. They can work, but again they can be turned off by the listener. Education of the danger may work.... A lot depends on the child.

Subject: Re: Earphones OK for six year old?

Posted by cwemoy on Tue, 28 Mar 2017 08:33:12 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

What would worry me more is that kind of exclusion from the rest. I've made it a rule in the house that when we're all seated in the lounge, it's time to catch up and bond. Nonetheless, I think earphones of good quality don't have a negative effect per se.

Subject: Re: Earphones OK for six year old?

Posted by Singlow on Tue, 28 Mar 2017 20:30:22 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

In as much as I would love to see my kids sitting together, 'bonding' or catching up, the reality is that they have so little in common when it comes to entertainment that I feel it would be unfair to expect them all to watch one show together.
