Hey guys. I won't lie, I own a lot of speakers, some that I use on regular basis while others I rarely ever use. However they are all different sizes and that got me thinking, what size speakers does everyone prefer?

I'm a minimalist in everything I do and I like to get the best quality sound for my particular needs from the smallest possible speaker. It also has to look really good.

Hi, Ones that do the job. I have several (don't know any longer how many). The mains are Martin Logan electrostatics with a pair of 7 cubic foot subs to handle the stuff below 40HZ. Others are a pair of Klipsch KG4s (vintage ones not the new ones), Altec Lansing 1010, Martin Logan (non-esl)Preface full range, lots of others. I figure that a speaker system should cover the entire spectrum, not be ugly and produce a realistic (even though not like the real thing) presentation of the artists work.

Both of you have very valid points. I'm in the same boat of not being able to remember the name of my speakers since there are so many that I own.

Isn't it funny how you have two people who both love music but express it in totally different ways? It's like they are at extreme ends of the spectrum when it comes to the speakers they own.
