
Subject: Cheap Gear
Posted by Keven on Tue, 25 Jul 2017 01:06:51 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I don't want to spend a lot of money on getting my little brother in music. What instrument is the cheapest and where can I get it?

Subject: Re: Cheap Gear
Posted by Wayne Parham on Tue, 25 Jul 2017 14:48:49 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think you'll probably want to stay away from all the strings and wind instruments, if cost is a huge issue. And to tell the truth, that pretty much goes for all instruments. But there are rentals, and that might be your answer.

It used to be that piano was one of the most expensive instruments to own, because even uprights were expensive. But these days, you can buy a pretty good electronic keyboard for $100. So that might be a good option.

Subject: Re: Cheap Gear
Posted by Lost the Remote on Fri, 25 Aug 2017 17:30:48 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Check out pawn shops if you're willing to buy from them. I've seen guitars, flutes, saxophones, and everything in between around here. It was cheaper to buy a flute there than it was to rent one from the music store.

Subject: Re: Cheap Gear
Posted by sawyer25 on Sat, 26 Aug 2017 06:56:55 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

The danger of going for the 'cheap' tag is that one may end up having musical instruments that aren't long lasting. When I wanted to buy my first guitar, a friend advised against being too 'cost conscious' and true to his word, I went for one that has lasted me more than 10 years.

Subject: Re: Cheap Gear
Posted by Leot55 on Sat, 26 Aug 2017 14:50:21 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I think it's sensible to buy an inexpensive starter instrument when you're first learning. You can always sell it later and upgrade to a better version once you know it's something you want to stick with. But, I can also see the point of spending more upfront for better quality. I bet you might luck out if you buy a used instrument that's made by a trustworthy company known for making durable instruments.

Subject: Re: Cheap Gear

Posted by moss24 on Sun, 27 Aug 2017 06:33:45 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Leot55 wrote on Sat, 26 August 2017 09:50 I think it's sensible to buy an inexpensive starter instrument when you're first learning. You can always sell it later and upgrade to a better version once you know it's something you want to stick with. But, I can also see the point of spending more upfront for better quality. I bet you might luck out if you buy a used instrument that's made by a trustworthy company known for making durable instruments.

Quite so Leot. On the other hand, it can also be worth it to (perhaps) hire an instrument or go for classes where there are a variety of good quality instruments. You can then purchase an instrument of choice, once your mind is made up.

Subject: Re: Cheap Gear

Posted by Zohanna on Mon, 04 Sep 2017 17:38:36 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I agree that pawn shops are a good option. I was able to get my first Martin acoustic guitar for only about $100. It was a great guitar, easy to learn to play, action was really close to the neck. I will keep shopping those pawn shops for instruments that I want to learn.
