I have yet to find some wireless earbuds that will stay put while I'm working out. How do others manage to keep the darn things in? I've tried looking around the room, but don't want to appear all weird. I'm not interested in switching to headphones because I sweat too much.

Of all the problems that I've heard from everyone around me, that's a new and unique one! I've never actually had an issue with this. I run most mornings and even when I work out in the gym, I never have problems with my earphones.

Do you think that the problem is with the earphones, or maybe your workout is just too vigorous?

I think I'm just buying the wrong kind or brand. My girlfriend teases me about having big ears or tiny ear canals, so the buds just won't stay in. What is the name of the buds you're using? I'll try them out since it's working for you.

I have the exact same problem! My ear canals must be shaped weird or something because I can never find the right fit. The best ones I could find in a good price range are from JBR Reflect. I still sometimes had problems with them but not nearly as many as I do with more standard earbuds. If you're willing to invest (and you will totally not be disappointed if you do!), I highly suggest getting the Bose SoundSport Pulse headphones. They come with three different sizes so that you can find the best fit for your ear and I have zero issues with them. They're pricey, I know. But like I said, totally worth it, especially if you workout a lot!

Earbuds have always been problematic for me the keep in the ear. I finally found some that were wired and stayed in but immediately broke a wire trying to get them out in a hurry. I am very interested in wireless ones but the ones I have been interested in are cost prohibitive. Thanks for the info.

Thank you all for responding. I'm glad to see I'm not the only one who struggles with this issue! I wouldn't normally spend a lot on wireless earbuds because I tend to lose them, but I ordered those Bose earbuds since they come in different sizes. I'll just have to be extra careful about keeping up with them.

If we're all having that problem, then I don't think that it's our ears that are the problem... It must be the earbuds. Thanks for the suggestion, though. I, too will make sure to try those out.
