I found on the internet a radio station that has an hour and a half show dedicated to audiophiles and their topics. The radio station is KZSU Stanford 90.1 FM. Does anyone else know of a larger station?

I actually don't know of another program that you could listen too, however, you can search the stations in your area and make recommendations about the topic. There are still a lot of audiophiles out there.

Hi, curious. I was unaware that audiophiles and non-audiophiles liked different music. I figure I am in the audiophiles group and I like nearly anything that is well recorded. I pretty much equate an audiophile to someone that likes music.

Not to speak for WorkingWoman, but I think she's saying that there is a show on there that is dedicated to talking about audiophiles and topics they'd be interested in. I'm not sure though because I looked through the different shows I could find on their schedules and didn't find this one. Do you remember what it was called, WorkingWoman?

I don't know of any such shows, but these days there are a lot of really good podcasts on that topic. I would suggest trying that out instead of searching for a single show.

Have you tried simply searching online? I think that you can't possibly be the first person to wonder about that, and I'm sure other audiophiles have an answer for you somewhere.

I'm thinking it might be easier to find a podcast on the subject. I don't know why but I never thought of this before.

Off I go to Podland.
