An electric violin that is, check out Jackie Brown by John Mellencamp. Much of his newer music has this instrument as well.

It adds a different layer to the music, and also makes the songwriter have to write the instrument into the rest of the melody. This, I would think, would be a challenge.

In my opinion, the electric violin makes a song sound more "mature" in a way. what do you think?

There's the French jazz electric violin of Jean luc Ponty. Been around since the 70's, (when I first heard him). You might check him out too.
