Has anyone had a dream where they remember hearing music in it? I know that you never get the sensation of your feet touching the ground when you're dreaming, but what about the tunes?

That's a curious question. And I don't remember any distinct musical accompaniment to one of my dreams. Some rather bizarre. But I can't figure that it couldn't occur. Yeah, and if it did happen to me, it'd probably be some song I despise.

Ive had that a few times when I was younger, and it was always with a familiar tune.

I remember being surprised at the accuracy and impeccable timing of the music (perhaps not very dream like).

Then I was told it was the silver fillings in my teeth... picking up radio waves like an antenna LOL..

I have never experienced such a thing but I also feel that it would be exciting to recall a dream that had music in it. I am a musical person so I think the best scenario would be a dream in a concert setting.

I can't remember ever hearing music in any of my dreams. In fact, I rarely ever remember my dreams at all. Sometimes, something happens during the course of the day that reminds me of a dream I had, but this doesn't happen often.

I've heard music in my dreams tons of times, but it's from my alarm clock. I'll start to hear the song in my dream and then wake up to the same song playing. Is hearing music in your dreams not normal?

I don't have music in my dreams. Maybe having music in dreams is a common thing, but the uncommon thing is remembering that specific dream when you wake up?

This is an interesting thing to consider but thinking about it now, I don't recall having any music in my dreams. Although I remember having conversations, I can't make up the sounds it made. After seeing this post, I'm now curious about how people with hearing disabilities dream.

What a great question. I don't think so, I've never really thought about it until right now. I remember having dreams about riding a carousel but I don't even remember that music. I can remember dreams about cruising in a car but I don't remember the music.

I don't remember hearing any music in my dreams, or any sounds for that matter. My dreams tend to be pretty quiet affairs. I wonder if any research has been done on this. It seems like an interesting research question!
