Subject: Wall Color
Posted by Junior on Thu, 11 Oct 2018 00:00:54 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Most theaters are using dark colors on its walls. I don't know if it works well with home theater because dark colors look gloomy when we are not watching anything in the living room. What do you think?

Subject: Re: Wall Color
Posted by Porter on Sun, 16 Dec 2018 20:01:43 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

When it comes to projectors, I think grayer tones are supposed to help the picture look its best unless you're planning to use a screen. If that doesn't appeal to you, what about adding a black border to frame out your white wall so that the viewing area is clear? It might be a good compromise. A lavender color might work as well.

Subject: Re: Wall Color
Posted by Lost the Remote on Mon, 17 Dec 2018 14:39:06 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

I bought a kit with special paint for my wall and it turned out good, but if I had to do it again I'd install a retractable screen instead. In order for the video to look nice you need a perfectly smooth wall so there's a lot of work patching and sanding. And woe betide the person who touches the area with their dirty fingers after it's all said and done.

Subject: Re: Wall Color
Posted by mamoss on Sun, 13 Jan 2019 11:13:01 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Lost the Remote wrote on Mon, 17 December 2018 08:39I bought a kit with special paint for my wall and it turned out good, but if I had to do it again I'd install a retractable screen instead. In order for the video to look nice you need a perfectly smooth wall so there's a lot of work patching and sanding. And woe betide the person who touches the area with their dirty fingers after it's all said and done.
What color did you settle for eventually? I support the idea of a retractable screen as well. For the walls, neutral colors are usually recommended so that accurate colors are maintained on the screen. Mid-tones to dark shades of grey or brown give the best viewing experience. Though black is an obvious choice for most people, the room may eventually feel smaller.