I was looking around for some good measurement tools and stumbled across the Room EQ Wizard. It looks like a good tool and it's free if anyone wants to make use of it. I'll be giving it a whirl this weekend when I have some time to sink into it.

Hey, thanks for the site. I looked into it and it looks pretty informative. I've been tinkering around with my setup trying to optimize the sound, so this seems like it could really help out with that.

I might try this out myself. Would you say there's a steep learning curve or is it pretty intuitive? Which mic did you decide to go with?

I just checked on YouTube and there is a whole video explaining everything about the Room EQ Wizard, from installation and how to use it. Looks like a very resourceful and important tool!
