Have you discovered any new podcasts lately that are worth subscribing to? One of my old favorites has started giving me nightmares, so I'm looking for a nonfiction podcast that's not crime centric.

I mainly watch tech podcasts on my phone and have never run into any problems. What have you been watching in the past? I would also love to start watching non-fiction podcasts.

TED Talks. There is always something new at least once a week that fascinates me. I like their psychology and financial talks. They have really good speakers.

It's been a while since I tuned in to a TED talk and yes, I agree that they have really good knowledgeable speakers. I have always had a bias for tech and human interest stories.

Sodajerker on Songwriting is a new favorite of mine. It's about the art of songwriting and creating that perfect hook to make your song memorable and draw people in. It's featured everyone from Sting to Adele.

I really like Hidden Brain. It's a non-fiction podcast and it's all about psychology. Some of the recent episodes are about gratitude, laughter and empathy. I learn something new every time I listen. :)

I'm enjoying this topic as I am always looking for new things to listen to. TED Talk sounds perfect for me. I'm a number geek but I also love anything to do with your brain and psychology! Thanks for recommending this one!

I'm going to add Sawbones. It's a podcast about the history of medicine, and it's funny too! I always like podcasts that are educational, so I really enjoy TED talks as well.

I discovered this podcast called Swindled, which is about true stories concerning scams and corporate evil. You can get creeped out because of its storytelling technique. You can say that it's partly historical too.

Has anyone encountered the 'Unexplainable' podcast yet?
It talks about science involving a variety of fields. I found it fun because there were a lot of new things that I encountered. The information isn't also bombarding since an episode is less than 30 minutes.
